

Country Journals

Yubeen Choi

Yubeen I

Table of contents

I. Brazil 🇧🇷

"Do you speak McFish?"

2. Japan 🇯🇵

"You can't stop us: The future isn't waiting."

3. Costa Rica 🇨🇷

"The Annexation Buckets"

4. Mexico 🇲🇽

"Share a Coke + Braille"

5. Russia 🇷🇺

"Thank you, Mom"

6. Egypt 🇪🇬

"#Activ8Egypt"

7. South Africa 🇿🇦

"Ford For South Africa"

8. Australia 🇦🇺

"Break Out of Your Bubble"

9. China 🇨🇳

"Crafted with care in every cup"

Brazil

Country	Brazil
Campaign	“Do you speak McFish?”
Brand	Duolingo & McDonald’s
Media	Tv / Film, Instagram, YouTube
Target Audience	Gen Z
Agency	GALERIA.ag
Year	2025

From Brazil comes a fun and quirky collaboration ad that took place. The campaign turns a language barrier into a humorous, shareable moment making English learning part of the dining experience.

Outlines

McDonald’s Brazil has partnered with Duolingo to rebrand the McFish sandwich as McFish & Chips, bringing it back in a campaign that cleverly – uses Duolingo’s mascot, Duo, to connect with local consumers.

The McFish & Chips meal has an English name, and in a country where less than 1% of people speak English fluently, it’s an opportunity disguised as a challenge.

In the advertisement uploaded by McDonald’s Brazil, a woman attempts to order the new “McFish & Chips” menu item but struggles with the English pronunciation. Every time she mispronounces it, Duolingo’s mascot, Duo, gets closer and closer to her, increasing the tension. The scene is humorously portrayed as if it were a scene from a horror movie. When she finally pronounces correctly, the video ends with being accompanied by Duolingo's signature correct answer sound effect and her satisfied reaction.[1] [2]

Marketing Elements

- Edutainment

Blending language learning and food in a way that appeals to a Brazilian audience that engages with pop culture and digital trends.[2]

- Dgital Engagement

McDonald's and Duolingo used humor, memes, and influencer marketing to build excitement and anticipation.[2]

- Limited-Time Opportunuty

The McFish & Chips meal was offered for a limited time, and for those in the My McD loyalty program, there’s an extra treat.[3]

- full-blown spectacle

McDonald’s knew that in Brazil, entertainment drives engagement. So they lit up the São Paulo skyline with a real drone show wrote the campaign slogan in the sky.[4]

Conclusion

In Brazil, fewer than 1% of the population speaks English fluently. This cultural and linguistic context makes a campaign centered around English pronunciation especially relevant. The idea of turning a menu item with an English name, “McFish & Chips,” into a small language challenge resonates in a country where foreign-language exposure is limited in daily life.

Additionally, Brazil has a large population of young, digitally connected users who are highly active on platforms such as TikTok and Instagram. This makes social media-driven campaigns particularly effective for engaging Gen Z and Millennials. The campaign’s integration with these platforms allowed it to reach its intended audience quickly and organically. The campaign wouldn’t have had the same impact in a country where English is already widely spoken.

McDonald’s Brazil and Duolingo didn’t just launch a campaign, they designed a cultural moment. By leveraging Duolingo’s viral appeal, they made the language barrier feel like a game, not an obstacle, and they engaged with humor and surprises that made it feel like an ad. By fully merging fast food with learning experiences, the company stands out in a competitive marketplace.

At its core, this campaign is a reminder of what great advertising does best: it sells without feeling like selling.[4]

That’s not just advertising. That’s persuasion at its finest.

1. McDonald's Brazil and Duolingo: A Masterclass in Marketing Magic https://www.adruby.com/duolingo/mcdonalds-brazil-and-duolingo-masterclass-marketing-magic

2. McFish&Chips - O Duo que o Brasil vai amar - video https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xvuRV4KzYAk&t=5s

3. Insight of the Day: Why did McDonald's Brazil team up with Duolingo?
https://www.insighttrendsworld.com/post/insight-of-the-day-why-did-mcdonald-s-brazil-team-up-with-duolingo

4. Why did McDonald's Brazil team up with Duolingo?
https://marcommnews.com/why-did-mcdonalds-brazil-team-up-with-duolingo/

5. Mcdonalds_br instagram
https://www.instagram.com/reel/DGdaphVJXBM/?utm_source=ig_embed&ig_rid=2c33c7f8-c880-42ab-bef7-5bc21d349dc6

6. McDonald's Brings Back McFish With Exciting New Twist
https://evrimagaci.org/tpg/mcdonalds-brings-back-mcfish-with-exciting-new-twist-227286?srsltid=AfmBOorKbJXAmli_EJ7y5itsXG8W1sYcffA4a8RcxCx4GvYXSb1GnWC8

Japan

Country	Japan
Campaign	You can’t stop us : The future isn’t waiting
Brand	Nike
Media	YouTube, Instagram, Twitter
Target Audience	Gen Z, sports enthusiasts, and Nike’s global audience
Agency	Wieden + Kennedy Tokyo
Year	2020

From Japan comes a powerful and socially conscious campaign that challenges cultural norms. The campaign turns real stories of discrimination and identity into a message of empowerment, resilience, and hope for the next generation.[1]

Outlines

Nike Japan launched this campaign to spark conversation about bullying, racism, and identity in Japanese society. The ad features three young women athletes, including a biracial girl and a Korean-Japanese student, who experience social exclusion because of their identity. Each girl finds her voice through sports, standing up to discrimination and inspiring others.[2]

In the video, a Black Japanese girl is mocked as classmates touch her hair without permission, a Zainichi Korean student faces intense stares as she transfers to a new school, and a Japanese girl receives hurtful comments on a video she uploads online.Beneath the surface, each struggles with self-doubt, asking themselves, “Am I good enough?” or “Normal enough?”

The ad emphasizes that these girls are not only dealing with bullying, but also with the broader societal that make them feel isolated. However, in the final part of the video, the tone shifts. The students begin to reject these negative thoughts, saying, “Nope.", "No way." and reclaim their sense of self. The commercial concludes with a message of hope, showing how the girls begin to find strength and confidence through sports. [3]

Marketing Elements

- Social messaging

Nike Japan said the ad highlights how people “overcome their daily struggles and conflicts to move their future through sports.” This reflects Nike’s global brand identity of empowerment through athletics, also localizes it to Japan’s context by showing how sports can help young people rise above issues like discrimination, bullying, and identity struggles.[4]

- Emotional Storytelling

During the development of this campaign, Nike Japan interviewed young people and found that bullying was the number one issue they wanted to change. With over 610,000 school bullying cases reported in Japan in one year, the team chose to focus on stories that felt deeply personal and real. The resulting film follows three actual young footballers who use sports to fight back against bullying and discrimination, allowing the audience to connect emotionally with their struggles and resilience.[5]

This campaign reminded the world that Nike is not just a sportswear company but a powerful storytelling brand that connects with consumers deeply.[6]

- Campaign Objectives

Nike designed the You Can't Stop Us campaign to inspire, unite, and strengthen the brand's leadership in sports marketing. They wanted to show that sports connect people - No matter their race or gender. So make this campaign highly shareable. The ad's powerful visuals and emotional storytelling sparked discussions, encouraged social media shares, and kept Nike at the center of cultural conversations. They also maximized engagement across platforms like YouTube, Twitter, and Instagram by launching it at the perfect moment during the Tokyo 2020 Olympics season and a time of global uncertainty.[6]

Conclusion

The campaign received both praise and criticism. Nike has been lauded for sending an inspirational message about using sports to help overcome an identity crisis. Others, however, have blasted the commercial as misrepresenting the realities of Japan and even attacking the country.[7] The BBC said the ad "has sparked fierce debate as Japan is unaccustomed to openly discussing sensitive issues such as race."[4]

Ultimately, the campaign became a national talking point, bringing attention to overlooked issues and proving that marketing can drive social reflection, not just sales.

1. NIKE JAPAN - You Can’t Stop The Future - video https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tgEPgs71r_s

2. Nike: The Future Isn’t Waiting https://www.wk.com/work/nike-the-future-isnt-waiting/

3. Nike Japan Ad Encouraging Diversity Angers Japanese Racists
https://unseen-japan.com/nike-japan-ad-diversity/

4. Nike's diversity advert causing a backlash in Japan
https://www.bbc.com/news/business-55140846

5. Nike Japan - You Can’t Stop Us: The Future Isn’t Waiting https://www.wktokyo.com/en/work/you-cant-stop-us-the-future-isnt-waiting

6. An Apparal Brand Becoming a Sport Activist?
https://marketingmaverick.io/p/you-can-t-stop-us-campaign-by-nike

7. Nike Japan ad on discrimination draws applause and outrage
https://www.asahi.com/ajw/articles/13993062

Costa Rica

Country	Costa Rica
Campaign	The Annexation Buckets
Brand	KFC
Media	YouTube, Facebook, and News article
Target Audience	Local people, Consumers interested in cultural
Agency	Havas Costa Rica
Year	2021

Due to the pandemic, the artisans' livelihoods—dependent on tourism—were threatened. To help, KFC noticed the resemblance between Guaitil pottery and its iconic buckets and launched the "Annexation Buckets" campaign.

Outlines

Nearly 200 years ago, the province of Guanacaste was annexed to Costa Rican territory, bringing with it a 5,000-year-old tradition. However, due to the pandemic, this cultural legacy became endangered as tourism, their main source of income, collapsed.

They noticed a certain similarity between some art pieces of this community and the famous KFC Bucket, that's why they decided to join forces and celebrate them. A collection of 45 handcrafted ceramic buckets, created by Guaitil artisans using the ancestral Chorotega technique, passed down through generations, the Annexation Buckets were born.

The number of buckets corresponds to the 45 KFC restaurants across Costa Rica, where they are exhibited to give greater visibility to the community's art. Finally, through a public auction, they aim to provide financial support to the Guaitil community.[1]

Marketing Elements

- Background

Guaitil is an indigenous community that joined the Costa Rican territory 197 years ago. This community has been seriously affected economically by the closing of the borders due to the pandemic.

To celebrate the anniversary of their annexation to Costa Rica and to help them in need, we at KFC made a very special order to the community of Guaitil: The Annexation Buckets. A special edition of 45 unique buckets, made with the millenary techniques of the indigenous people of the region. Hand-crafted, sand-based iguana, baked in clay ovens and dried in the sun for 48 hours, then decorated by different native artisans.[2]

"In Costa Rica, tourism represents the [sole] income for many communities; that is why in KFC we wanted to help. Searching for the perfect way to help, we noticed a certain similarity between some art pieces of this community and the famous KFC Bucket; that's why we decided to join forces and celebrate them,"[3]

Carlos Álvares
(KFC Costa Rica brand manager)

- Execution

These Annexation Buckets are coinciding with 'Guanacaste Day', which commemorates the annexation of the province.[5] The project was developed by the agency Havas Costa Rica, and the buckets were auctioned at a three-day Facebook Live event. The funds raised at the auction were destined to support the Guaitil Community.[3]

Conclusion

In this way, KFC provides an example of how a large brand can take civic action through unexpected approaches.

Such projects also reflect the need for resilient and agile business models to aid local craftspeople. And while this support ordinarily comes from the ethical fashion and homeware brands that heavily rely on craftsmanship, KFC recognises the opportunity to highlight regional talent and cultural identity in lieu of tourism.[4]

1. THE ANNEXATION BUCKETS
https://www.adsoftheworld.com/campaigns/the-annexation-buckets

2. 2022 ADC AWARDS - PACKAGING DESIGN THE ANNEXATION BUCKETS
https://www.oneclub.org/awards/adcawards/-award/43046/the-annexation-buckets/

3. KFC COSTA RICA SUPPORTS LOCAL TOURISM INDUSTRY AFFECTED BY THE PANDEMIC
https://issuu.com/newsouthpublishing/docs/akfcf_fall_2021/s/13548174

4. KFC supports local artisans with Costa Rican ceramics https://www.lsnglobal.com/article/view/27176

5. KFC - "The Annexation Buckets"KFC Partners with Local Costa Rican Artists for Handmade Ceramic 'Buckets' https://mossandfog.com/kfc-partners-with-local-costa-rican-artists-for-handmade-ceramic-buckets/

6. KFC - "The Annexation Buckets" - video https://www.adforum.com/creative-work/ad/player/34639311/the-annexation-buckets/kfc

Mexico

Country	Mexico
Campaign	Share a Coke + Braille Campaign
Brand	Coca Cola
Media	YouTube, social media sites, TV adverts, billboards
Target Audience	Millennials, a person who is visually impaire
Agency	Anonimo
Year	2015

Coca-Cola has made many famous ads, and "Share a Coke" is one of the best examples. This campaign used names on bottles to make people feel more special. That's why the campaign became popular in many countries.

But later, one ad agency saw that blind people couldn't enjoy the campaign because it was based on seeing. So, they worked with Coca-Cola to make Coke cans with Braille names. This way, blind people could also join and feel included.[2,4]

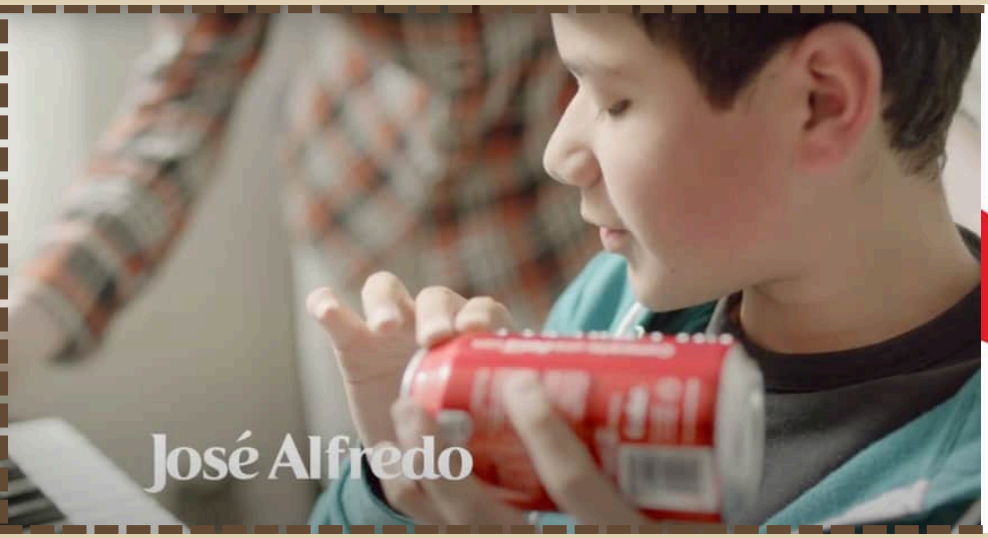

Overview

Coca-Cola started the ‘Share a Coke’ campaign in Australia in 2011, and it soon became popular all over the world. Instead of the usual Coca-Cola logo, the bottles had people’s names on them. The campaign aimed to foster a sense of personal connection and encourage sharing among friends and loved ones.

In Mexico, the campaign used not only common names like ‘Juan’ and ‘Sofía’ but also friendly words like ‘Amigo’ and ‘Cariño.’ This made the campaign feel local and special, helping Mexican people feel closer to the global brand.[2]

But since the campaign used mostly visual designs, it could be alienating to visually impaired consumers. Realizing this, the ad agency Anónimo added names in Braille on Coke cans so that people who are blind could also enjoy the campaign.

This special version of Coke helped everyone feel included. It showed that Coca-Cola cares about accessibility and made people trust the brand even more.[3]

Marketing Elements

- Culture

In Mexico, names are not merely a means of identification; they are personal, not just for calling someone, they also show family, traditions, and emotions. Coca-Cola understood this and added not just names, but also sweet words and phrases on the bottles. This helped people feel included and proud of their culture.[2]

- Personalization

Coca-Cola made the campaign more emotional by putting people's names on the bottles. When they found a Coke with their name, it made special and more connected to the brand.

- Inclusive Marketing

The Braille bottle campaign was not merely a symbolic gesture, but a powerful expression of Coca-Cola's message as a brand for everyone. By incorporating accessibility into product design, the company enabled consumers with disabilities to equally participate in the brand experience, which generated strong social resonance and emotion.

- Social Media Engagement

Coca-Cola also used social media to make the campaign more popular.
This helped the campaign grow fast online. The hashtag #ShareACoke became famous and helped advertise Coke without paid ads.[5]

Conclusion

This campaign was not just about selling a product. It also shared an important message about society. The brand showed what it believes in and tried to help people who are often left out. One good example is the Braille idea, which helped blind people and made them feel included.
In the end, this campaign is a smart marketing plan. It shows that a brand can be a real part of people's lives. By using new ideas and caring about everyone, the brand becomes stronger. The campaign focused on feelings, sharing, and including everyone. These are very important in today's world if brands want to build good relationships with customers.

1. Coca-Cola: Braille - video https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Y55KQUAT1kE&t=6s

2. Coca-Cola's 'Share a Coke': A Personalized Mexican Twist on a Global Classic
https://www.brandvertising.ch/2024/05/coca-cola-share-a-coke-mexico/

3. Coca Cola Braille Campaign
https://liquidcreativestudio.com/coca-cola-braille-campaign/

4. Coca-Cola Is Now Printing Cans and Bottles in Braille for Blind People https://www.adweek.com/creativity/coca-cola-now-printing-cans-and-bottles-braille-blind-people-164665/

5. The Story Behind Coca-Cola's 'Share a Coke' Campaign
https://gauriapte2706.medium.com/the-story-behind-coca-colas-share-a-coke-campaign-9897f5b207b0

6. Comparte una Coca-Cola: Adivina Mi Nombre | Coca-Cola Verano :30 - video https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=CNu9GjbgDxg

Russia

Country	Russia
Campaign	Thank you, Mom
Brand	Procter & Gamble (P&G)
Media	YouTube, TV adverts
Target Audience	A diverse range of consumers
Agency	Wieden+Kennedy
Year	2014

In the run-up to the 2014 Sochi Winter Olympics, P&G launched an inspiring global campaign, "Thank You, Mom". The campaign highlighted the dedication and love of mothers behind the success of Olympic athletes, while delivering a strong family-oriented message tailored to local Russian culture.

Overview

The commercial shows young Russian athletes falling, failing, and struggling while snowboarding, skiing, etc. But always being gently embraced, encouraged, constantly stand them up for, and comforted by their mothers. Then, in the last 45 seconds, Olympic athletes soar on skis and snowboards and land with sure feet on ice skates as crowds roar and relieved moms cheer from the sidelines. It ends with the message: "For teaching us that falling only makes us stronger."[2]

What's especially notable is the absence of direct product promotion throughout the ad. Only at the end do P&G brands like Tide, Bounty, and Gillette appear briefly on screen. Rather than focusing on products, the campaign focuses on a universal human truth—that behind every great child stands a loving parent. P&G extends this idea by positioning itself as a 'proud sponsor of moms,' reinforcing emotional authenticity while subtly connecting its household brands to real-life care and support.[5]

Marketing Elements

- Localization

The campaign also features Russian figure skater Elena Ilinykh and her mother, reflecting a localized strategy for the Russian market, demonstrating P&G's intent to maintain a global message while connecting emotionally with local cultures.[3]

- Storytelling

P&G's marketing strategies revolve around powerful storytelling that evokes emotions and captures hearts. P&G leverages human experience and relatable stories to create campaigns that create a lasting impact on consumers.[4]

The 3 Act story structure is followed by these advertisements. Act 1 sets the premise of showing children growing up and their mothers being alongside them every step of the way. Act 2 shows an incident that acts as a turning point such as an injury or discrimination that a child faced. Act 3 shows how the athletes overcome these challenges and succeed.[5]

- Timing and Occasion-Based

P&G launched this campaign during the 2014 Sochi Winter Olympics. By aligning the campaign with a major international event held in Russia, they were able to reinforce the brand's emotional message and maximize visibility during a time of heightened national interest and media coverage. This made the message more relevant, memorable, and culturally significant to Russian consumers.

Conclusion

This campaign was highly effective in Russia because Russian society has a strong culture of respecting family and maternal sacrifices. The ads naturally appealed to these emotions and formed a positive emotional bond with the brand.

And also the 2014 Sochi Winter Olympics was a symbol of great pride for the Russian people, the timing of the campaign, combining the stories of mothers and national athletes, was perfect to create national empathy.

While product advertising was largely invisible, brands like Pampers, Tide, and Gillette built an image of trust and warmth through these emotional messages.

1. P&G 'Thank you Mom' Commercial: "#BecauseOfMom" (Sochi 2014 Olympic Games) - video https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=bQoJqDi8490&t=1s

2. P&G aims for moms' heart with latest 'Thank you' ad
https://www.usatoday.com/story/money/business/2014/01/08/pg-olympics-thank-you-ad/4380229/

3. Procter & Gamble Brands Unite to Kick Off Sochi 2014 Olympic Winter Games 'Thank You Mom' Campaign by Launching a Series of 28 Raising an Olympian Films
https://www.aa.com.tr/en/archive/procter-amp-gamble-brands-unite-to-kick-off-sochi-2014-olympic-winter-games-thank-you-mom-campaign-by-launching-a-series-of-28-raising-an-olympian-films/208361

4. Procter and Gamble Marketing Strategy: The FMCG Giant https://startuptalky.com/procter-and-gamble-p-g-marketing-strategy/

5. Thank You, Mom!
https://medium.com/marketing-in-the-age-of-digital/thank-you-mom-d128383d41e9

Egypt

Country	Egypt
Campaign	#Activ8Egypt
Brand	Marriott International
Media	Marriott.com, Facebook, Instagram, Twitter (X)
Target Audience	International tourists, Business Events
Agency	In-house (Marriott International Marketing Team)
Year	2015

From Egypt comes a tourism revival campaign driven by Marriott International to support the local economy and rebuild the country's global image after years of instability. The #Activ8Egypt campaign used the hashtag and the acronym "MISR" to rebrand the country.[1]

Overview

At the heart of the campaign was the acronym “MISR,” the Arabic word for Egypt, reimagined to stand for,

M - Magnificent

I - Inviting

S - Sensational

R - Rewarding

Marriott used this to market Egypt as a world-class destination.[1]

This campaign aims to support the revival of tourism in Egypt by encouraging fans across the Arab world to reveal their favourite memories of the country. The campaign works on assembling the vital legacy of the hotel, which is full of nostalgia, excitement, and love for Egypt and its people.

The campaign showcased Marriott’s commitment to the country. With over 4,000 hotels worldwide and a loyalty base of 47 million members, Marriott promoted Egypt as a key destination through its channels, such as Marriott.com and global press events.

Emphasized that despite security and political instability post-2011, it continued investing in Egypt, maintaining six hotels over 3,000 rooms, employing more than 5,000 local staff, and using both English and Arabic messaging. Activ8Egypt positioned tourism not just as a business, but as a form of national resilience and partnership.[3,4]

One example within the broader Activ8Egypt campaign was the involvement of the Cairo Marriott Hotel. As one of the most iconic properties in Egypt, the hotel launched a sub-campaign called Men Tani Ala Masr, which translates to 'Once Again Back to Egypt', in collaboration with EGYPTAIR.[2]

This encouraged travelers to share personal stories and nostalgic memories of Egypt on social media using the English hashtag #Activ8Egypt and the Arabic hashtag #من_تاني_على_مصر.

Marketing Elements

- Branding & Emotional Messaging

The acronym "MISR" (Magnificent, Inviting, Sensational, Rewarding) served as both a branding tool and an emotional message. This gave the campaign a locally grounded but globally understandable message.[4]

- Government and Corporate Collaboration

Marriott worked together with the Egyptian government and tourism authorities to support the campaign. This showed that both public and private sectors were united in helping Egypt's tourism recover.[4]

- Global Distribution

Marriott used its hotel website, Marriott.com, along with its global brand presence and loyalty program to bring global attention to Egypt.[1]

Conclusion

The campaign responded directly to Egypt's need to restore international confidence in its tourism industry. By using Arabic messaging and highlighting cultural identity, Activ8Egypt built emotional resonance with audiences across the region. They are more than a travel campaign—it's an example of brand diplomacy. Marriott used its influence not just to sell rooms, but to rebuild the image of an entire country. By combining commercial strategy with emotional storytelling and government cooperation, Marriott showed how a global brand can meaningfully support a country's recovery efforts.

1. Marriott International's Commitment to Egypt with #Activ8Egypt Campaign
https://marcopolis.net/marriott-international-s-commitment-to-egypt-with-activ8egypt-campaign.htm

2. Cairo Marriott brings memories to life with its unique campaign to promote Egypt's tourism https://meobserver.org/business-economix/2016/05/18/cairo-marriott-brings-memories-to-life-with-its-unique-campaign-to-promote-egypts-tourism/

3. Page 18 - MARRIOTT BUZZ NO. 3 - 2015
https://www.marriottcairobuzz.com/issue_3/files/assets/basic-html/page18.html

4. Page 19 - MARRIOTT BUZZ NO. 3 - 2015
https://www.marriottcairobuzz.com/issue_3/files/assets/basic-html/page19.html

South Africa

Country	South Africa
Campaign	Ford For South Africa
Brand	Ford
Media	YouTube, Facebook, Instagram, Twitter (X)
Target Audience	Individuals, families, and businesses.
Agency	Network BBDO
Year	2020

'Ford For South Africa' brand campaign goes beyond just highlighting Ford's corporate and product legacy. It captures the essence of what makes Ford, and the Ford family in South Africa, deeply involved and committed to this wonderful and vibrant country.[1]

Overview

Ford Motor Company has proudly maintained a legacy in South Africa for over 96 years — a history built on continuous investment, innovation, and a strong commitment to local communities.[2] From assembling the first Model T in Port Elizabeth to operating major manufacturing plants in Silverton, Ford has demonstrated its long-standing presence in the country.[4]

> Ford is 'for' many things: creating jobs, boosting the economy, supporting worthy causes, investing in the youth, protecting our country's wildlife, and the list goes on. Sharing these stories in a more deliberate way has the power to build a positive brand affinity and reputation, and defined our approach to this new campaign.[3]
>
> Neale Hill, Managing director of Ford Motor Company South Africa (FMCSA)

The campaign aims to celebrate the positive commitment Ford has made to the community and culture of South Africa by showcasing genuine acts of empathy, goodwill, and national pride. With export operations contributing to 1% of the country's GDP, and the locally assembled Ranger being exported to over 100 countries, Ford is not only a leader in the pick-up segment but also a symbol of South Africa's global industrial influence.[3]

Marketing Elements

- Trust & Long-Term Commitment

The goal was not only to show what Ford is doing locally, but also why the company is doing it, highlighting a deeper purpose rooted in community and national progress. The message resonates strongly in a time of uncertainty, as it reassures South Africans that one of the world's oldest and most respected manufacturers is here to stay, actively investing in the country's future.[1]

- Branding This campaign

This campaign focuses on more than just vehicles, it positions Ford as a long-standing, committed member of the South African community. Rather than emphasizing features or sales, the campaign highlights Ford's purpose: to support and uplift the people of South Africa. ex) producing COVID-19 face shields, supporting environmental conservation through the Ford Wildlife Foundation, and the Ford Research and Engagement Centre in Mamelodi.

By presenting Ford not just as a car manufacturer but as a trusted local partner, the campaign reinforces brand loyalty and emotional connection with South African consumers.[2]

Conclusion

The Ford For South Africa campaign is built on an authentic and symbolic structure: a series of promises that begin with the simple word "for." Each phrase, for the people, for innovation, for the environment, for generations to come, reflects a different facet of Ford's identity and its commitment to the nation. This repetition is not just stylistic; it's strategic. It reinforces the brand's message that Ford is not here only to sell vehicles, but to stand for something greater.

It builds a future-oriented image rooted in history, driven by purpose, and connected to people's lives. In the end, Ford For South Africa isn't just a slogan.[3]

For today. For tomorrow. Ford is for South Africa.[5]

1. FORD LAUNCHES INSPIRING BRAND CAMPAIGN FOCUSING ON ITS PROUD HERITAGE, INVESTMENT AND COMMITMENT – FOR SOUTH AFRICA
https://media.ford.com/content/fordmedia/img/za/en/news/2020/07/23/ford-launches-inspiring-brand-campaign-focusing-on-its-proud-her.html

2. Ford Launches Inspiring Brand Campaign Focusing On Its Proud Heritage, Investment And Commitment For South Africa
https://www.ford.co.za/about-ford/newsroom/2020/ford-launches-inspiring-brand-campaign/

3. 'Ford For South Africa' campaign focuses on its proud heritage, investment and commitment https://www.bizcommunity.com/Article/196/454/208807.html

4. CELEBRATING FORD SOUTH AFRICA'S HERITAGE WITH THESE HOMEGROWN MODELS
https://media.ford.com/content/fordmedia/img/za/en/news/2020/09/11/celebrating-ford-south-africas-heritage-with-these-homegrown-mod.html

5. For today. For tomorrow. Ford is for South Africa. - video https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=JfATD-5yFQ8

Australia

Country	Australia
Campaign	Break Out of Your Bubble
Brand	Tinder
Media	TikTok, YouTube, Spotify, and Meta
Target Audience	Gen Z, Millennials
Agency	In-house (Tinder)
Year	2025

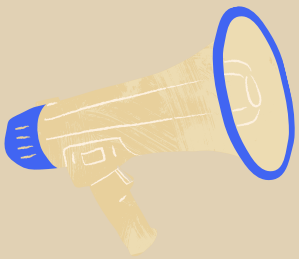

This campaign, launched in the Australian summer season that encourages young Australians to step away from their familiar routines and explore new people, places, and experiences, which is built on Tinder's signature wit and playful vibe.

Overview

This campaign humorously portrays Australians being trapped in their “everyday bubbles” through a satirical news report format. The ad video shows people stuck inside social bubbles and conveys the message that Tinder helps them break out by connecting them with new people. The campaign combines attention-magnets, local knowledge, and influencers to encourage Australians to step outside their comfort zone and explore new people, places, and experiences through the app’s dating pool.[3] It features familiar Australian faces, such as TikTok stars Sam Fricker, Ella Jae, Oliver Mills, and The Fitzy Twins, which enhances viewer engagement and relatability.[1]

This is all about inspiring Aussies to break free from their everyday routines and discover the endless possibilities waiting just outside their comfort zones. Also, launched to coincide with the peak dating season, which runs from the end of the year through Valentine's Day, when users receive an average of 2.1 million more messages and 298 million more "likes" per day.[2]

“A new relationship starts on Tinder every three seconds and we believe that the best relationships often start when you try something new. ‘Break Out of Your Bubble’ is all about inspiring Aussies to break free from their everyday routines and discover the endless possibilities waiting just outside their comfort zones.”[5]

Marketing Elements

Storytelling

- Satirical content in the form of a news report delivers a humorous message about breaking away from everyday routines.[4]
- Australian influencers appear to generate empathy and interest.

Seasonal Timing

- Tinder launched an intensive campaign during its peak season, from late December to Valentine's Day in February.
- Strategically aligning the summer season in Australia with the theme of "new experiences."

Creators and Talent[4]

- Sam Fricker: Bringing sharp wit and charm to his segments in Sydney hotspots like Bondi and Centennial Park.
- Ella Jae: Spotlighting relatable university life moments, filmed at iconic locations like Sydney Uni and Paddington pubs.
- Oliver Mills: Infusing humor into Melbourne's quirks, from Fitzroy's trendy streets to house parties in Thornbury.[5]
- The Fitzy Twins: Highlighting Melbourne's everyday routines with a playful twist, from running The Tan to crossing the Yarra.

Conclusion

The campaign successfully connected with young Australians by blending humor, local culture, and a strong emotional message. Through relatable content featuring local influencers and real-life settings, the campaign encouraged Gen Z and Millennials to step outside their comfort zones and make meaningful new connections. The creative use of satirical news reports and visual metaphors like transparent bubbles helped bring the concept to life in an engaging way. By launching the campaign during Australia's peak dating season and promoting it across social-first platforms, Tinder ensured strong visibility and relevance. Overall, this campaign demonstrates how global brands like Tinder can effectively localize their message to reflect the cultural and emotional realities of a specific market.

1. Tinder encourages Aussies to step out of comfort zones in new campaign https://www.mi-3.com.au/07-01-2025/tinder-encourages-aussies-step-out-comfort-zones-new-campaign

2. Tinder breaks down Aussie dating tropes in new campaign https://mumbrella.com.au/tinder-breaks-down-aussie-dating-tropes-in-new-campaign-861271

3. TINDER AUSTRALIA SATIRISES AUSSIE DATING HABITS TO BREAK THE DATING BUBBLE
https://www.thestable.com.au/tinder-australia-satirises-aussie-dating-habits-to-break-the-dating-bubble/

4. TINDER INVITES AUSSIES TO "BREAK OUT OF YOUR BUBBLE" THIS SUMMER WITH SERIES OF SATIRICAL "NEWS REPORTS" STARRING AUSSIE INFLUENCERS
https://campaignbrief.com/tinder-invites-aussies-to-break-out-of-your-bubble-this-summer-with-series-of-satirical-news-reports-starring-aussie-influencers/

5. Tinder challenges Aussie singles to 'Break Out of Your Bubble' in new summer campaign https://www.mediaweek.com.au/tinder-challenges-aussie-singles-to-break-out-of-your-bubble/

6. Tinder: Break Out Of Your Bubble (House Party) - One of the videos from this campaign
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5cq8ZxAgkXs&t=8s

China

Country	China
Campaign	好好照顾每一杯 (“Crafted with care in every cup”)
Brand	Starbucks
Media	Weibo, Wechat, Xiaohongshu, Douyin
Target Audience	Coffee lovers and general consumers
Agency	Anomaly Shanghai[5]
Year	2025

The campaign, titled ‘好好照顾每一杯’ (meaning “Crafted with care in every cup”), highlights what truly sets Starbucks apart—its passionate baristas.[1] This campaign goes beyond a simple beverage advertisement and delivers an emotional message suggesting ‘rest’ and ‘mindfulness’ in our busy daily lives.

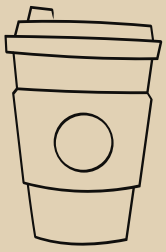

Overview

The campaign kicks off with a punchy brand video featuring the mantra, "The last ten feet are in our hands," showcasing the care and dedication of each barista.[3] The video features scenes of baristas carefully preparing drinks, customers enjoying their time in a quiet store, and a short documentary covering the process from where coffee beans are produced to how a cup is made.

This focus continues through a series of videos that showcase the craftsmanship behind each drink, from the precise pour of a Flat White to the measured shake of an Iced Shaken Espresso, offering a closer look at the skill and attention to detail involved.[2]

Rather than humor or speed, this commercial takes a calm and serious approach that deeply resonates with the emotions of Chinese consumers.

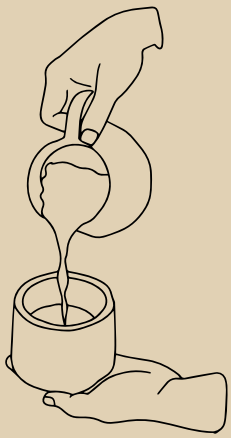

"This campaign is a reaffirmation of what sets Starbucks apart — the craftsmanship behind every cup, and the people who bring it to life."[3]

Tony Yang, Starbucks China.

"Celebrating and building a brand's culture and community is something we are always passionate about. After talking to many baristas, we decided to use their own words in the entire campaign, from the slogan to every word in each spot. No one is able to express their passion and love for coffee better than themselves. In a world that hype over AI, authentic passion and emotion became even more powerful. "[3]

Elvis Chau, Anomaly Shanghai.

Marketing Elements

Storytelling

- By focusing on ‘consideration’ rather than ‘caffeine’, it precisely targets the needs of modern Chinese people who seek emotional comfort and small happiness in everyday life.

Premium Positioning

- Strengthens Starbucks' premium brand image through handcrafted beverages and an emphasis on quality.

Omnichannel approach[4]

- Campaigns were run simultaneously across multiple channels, including in-store digital screens and short-form video platforms.
- A video that captures the baristas’ daily lives and the coffee-making process, visually expressing their passion and dedication.

Starbucks - Intenso

Starbucks - Americano

Conclusion

This campaign was an approach that went beyond simple marketing to emphasize the brand’s core values of “sincerity” and “consideration.” For this campaign, Starbucks strengthened its position in the Chinese market as a lifestyle brand that provides warm relaxation and emotional experiences in everyday life, beyond a simple coffee brand. In particular, by emphasizing the craftsmanship of baristas and sincere service to customers, it conveyed value beyond just a simple beverage to consumers. This approach is in line with the rapidly changing consumer trends and cultural trends that emphasize emotional consumption in China, and has contributed to increasing trust and loyalty to the brand.

1. Tag: starbucks
https://marketech-apac.com/tag/starbucks/

2. Starbucks China spotlights baristas' dedication and craftsmanship in new campaign https://marketech-apac.com/starbucks-china-spotlights-baristas-dedication-and-craftsmanship-in-new-campaign/

3. Starbucks brings to life the dedication of 60,000 baristas in China https://www.marketing-interactive.com/starbucks-brings-to-life-the-dedication-of-baristas-in-china

4. Starbucks China's Bold Celebration of Barista Craftsmanship - Video https://lbbonline.com/news/starbucks-chinas-bold-celebration-of-barista-craftsmanship

5. Starbucks China Celebrates its Baristas in New Campaign via Anomaly Shanghai https://www.brandinginasia.com/starbucks-china-celebrates-it-baristas-in-new-campaign-via-anomaly-shanghai/